LEADERS DISCUSS SOLUTION PLANS

LONDON, September 27.—(Special to The Advertiser.)—Lord Loreburn's long attachment to Radicalism and his high rank as a Liberal Unionist have caused some restraint in newspaper comment, but his solemn appeal to the nation for a Home Rule conference has, nevertheless, excited much angry talk among fighting Unionists and Nationalists. They can not see the justification for this august intervention, just at the time when the resistance operation of the Parliament Act seemed to assure the realization, next year, of their life-long dream of the establishment of an Irish Parliament on College Green.

The suggestion that the whole thing is a put-up job and that Lord Loreburn is simply Premier Asquith in disguise, anxious to get his party out of the mess of growing Irish entanglements, gains no serious support. An explanation which finds wide acceptance is three-fold. It is stated, firstly, that Lord Loreburn and a section of the cabinet have been made increasingly anxious by the evidence that Sir Edward Carson's inflammatory talk, with the tacit support of the official opposition, is letting loose the wild forces of Ulster; and secondly, that the attitude of no insignificant number of army men with strong Ulster sympathies threatens to produce grave embarrassment if the use of force becomes necessary.

The third factor is the action of an influential section of the Unionist party for whom George Cave, K.C., M.P., has become spokesman, in persistently dragging the crown into the controversy and organizing a national petition to the King to veto the Home Rule Bill, and practically dismiss his ministers if they refuse to voluntarily dissolve parliament. Court circles are known to resent this unpleasant development of the Home Rule struggle, which threatens to place the sovereign in an impossible position toward a great political party, to which, he may, at any time, have to look for his next ministry. In order to remove this danger of embroiling the crown in party discussions, the more moderate Unionists would go great lengths in the way of concessions. In fact, they would stop short only of the surrender of the essential principle of the Home Rule Bill, namely, the creation of a real Irish Parliament.

Press Opinions.
The Westminster Gazette, which is regarded as the special organ of the Aquinian section of the Liberal party, is supporting the idea of a round-table conference, says significantly:
"We can only profitably discuss the proposed conference on the ground that the crown stands altogether outside the Irish question."

The Morning Post, which is the spokesman for high society, utters the following warning, which the Westminster Gazette heartily endorses:
"There must be no attempt to draw the crown into the arena of party strife. Nothing could be more injurious to the standpoint of 'national and Imperial interests' than that the King should be placed in a position in which he might seem to have favored one section of his subjects, and thus expose his person and office to the hostile criticism of the best people."

There are powerful influences in all parties working for the settlement of the Irish problem by consent, but the Carsonites and fighting Unionists, on the one side, and a large section of the Nationalists, not to speak of the fighting Radicals and Laborites, on the other, are still as far as the poles asunder.

Irish Want No Conference.
Belfast and Dublin despatches today indicate that Lord Loreburn's appeal for a compromise in the Home Rule issue has been a complete failure in Ireland. Irish Unionists simply will not listen to the suggestion either of compromise or conference, so long as the present bill is in the field, while Nationalists regard the appeal as an attempt to deprive them of the results of the bargain made between their party and the government by which the latter has been kept in office. They regard the proposed conference as absolutely useless unless the Unionist party accepts the principle of the Irish Parliament at Dublin.

PROBE FAILED TO IMPRESS BROWN

Oldest Police Official on Hawaii Began to Misuse Public Funds at Time When Graft Hunters Were Busiest—Pathetic Side to the Story When He Pointed to His Children.

(Mail Special to The Advertiser.)
HILO, Hawaii, September 26.—Enoch Brown, the oldest police official in Hilo, last Thursday confessed that he was guilty of the embezzlement of county funds to the amount of over six hundred dollars. The most surprising thing about the case lies in the fact that Brown says he did not begin his career in that line until April of this year and that he did his devious tricks right along while the work of Gooding Field, Williamson and Breckons was going on.

The facts which led to the arrest of Brown were discovered by Gooding Field in the course of the audit which he conducted of the accounts of the various district courts on this island. He found that considerable sums of money had been sent into Hilo from the various outside districts, but that there was no record of their having been turned into the treasury. Where money was received for bail at the jails, the jailers would turn it over to the deputy sheriffs, who would send it to Brown, who in his turn would turn it over to the treasurer.

When Field found that this money was not turned in to the treasurer, he gathered enough evidence to show that certain sums had been sent to Brown. Then he lit out from Kohala, where he was auditing the district court books, and arrived in Hilo last Thursday morning. In the mean time he had telephoned to Sheriff Pua, telling him that he was coming and that he wanted Brown on hand.

Field reported on his findings to Commissioner Williamson, and at about ten o'clock the two had a conference with Sheriff Pua. Brown was not there. He had sent word that he was sick at home. He was told to come, anyhow, and obeyed. The evidence was presented to him, and he could offer no explanation.

The prosecutors felt sure that they had a dead sure case at all events, so they allowed Brown until two o'clock in the afternoon in which to prepare his explanation and present his records. At the appointed hour Brown faced Field, Williamson and Prosecutor Breckons in the sheriff's office, the sheriff being present, also. Field again produced his records and asked his questions, incisively and clearly, supplemented from time to time by a question from Breckons.

Brown said that he would look for some of the records, about which he was asked. He returned to his own office, which adjoins that of the sheriff.

The scene had its pathetic side. A pretty little girl, the accused man's daughter, was playing about the big desk, where her father was fumbling about in his hopeless task of finding a way out of his difficulty. The child came playfully in his way. He pushed it aside gently and continued his aimless search.

Caught With the Goods.

Breckons and Field stepped in, followed by Williamson. They called the attention of Brown to the fact that not a single remittance had been made by him to the treasurer to the account of fines and costs from the outside districts since last April, and confronted him with the record of such moneys which had been turned in to him.

"Where is the money?" asked Field. "In the safe," answered Brown. "Get it," ordered Field.

"Get all the money you have in your possession which belongs to the county," said Breckons.

Like a man in a daze Brown went to the big safe. The perspiration rolled down his face as he opened it. Then he produced the contents in checks and coins. They amounted to a total of $17.05.

Brown handed over this pittance, well knowing that it was far short of the amount which the safe should have contained. He faced the prosecutors with the hopeless expression of the man who has come to the end of his tether.

"Is that all the county money you have?" asked Breckons.

"Yes," whispered Brown.

"Well, where is the money you took, spent it?" asked Breckons in a kindly tone.

"Yes," said Breckons. "Now come in with us and tell us about it."

To Support His Family.

The men returned to the sheriff's office, and here, Brown, on being faced with the individual items of his short age, confessed to each one of them.

"But what did you do with the money, gambling?" asked Breckons.

"No,"

"Women?"

"No, I just spent it because I need it."

For paying your bills, to keep up with your bills?"

"Yes, I have nine children."

Brown added, in answer to further

Questions, that he had begun embezzling these funds last April. He estimated that he had taken in all about six hundred dollars.

A Full Confession.

It appeared later on that during the interval which separated the first and the second meeting between Brown and the prosecutors, Brown had made a confession to the sheriff.

"He told me that he had dug his own hole," said Pua, when asked about this matter. "That was at about noon, after Field had seen him in the morning. Ever since this investigation started, I have been careful to have nothing to do with the money kept by my subordinates for fear of being mixed up into any crookedness which may exist. I want the commission to do all that work."

A couple of hours after Brown had confessed, Breckons had him arrested on a warrant charging him with embezzling $39, this being an amount which had been turned over to him from Kailua.

Field returned last Friday to Kohala in order to finish his audit there. He pointed out, with some show of eloquence, a demonstration of dishonesty by Brown, and furnished the other details of the county auditing as it is being carried on at present. "It was only a few weeks ago that an expensive auditing trip was taken by Ben Brown and Harold to audit these very district court accounts while at that time the embezzlement had been and was being committed," said Field. "What is the use of an audit made by men who don't know the business?"

DIAZ ORDERED HOME BY HUERTA

Message Sent to Former Dictator Commanding Him to Return to Land from Which He Was Driven an Exile a Short Time Ago by Army of President Madero.

CITY OF MEXICO, September 28.—(Associated Press Cable to The Advertiser.)—Intense interest has been aroused here by the publication of the fact that Provisional President Huerta has sent a cable order to Porfirio Diaz, ex-President and Dictator, to return immediately to Mexico, "for active army service." Inasmuch as Diaz has announced that he will never return to his native land, from which he was driven by Madero, unless the time should arise when his country is threatened and his presence is needed to preserve it from destruction, the order has commanded widespread attention and many conjectures are made as to the meaning of it.

It is feared that Huerta has determined upon some step that will arouse Washington as to make intervention on the part of the United States more than a probability, and that the presence of the aged Dictator is wanted to solidify the Mexican nation and make intervention impossible, unless President Wilson is prepared to engage his country in a war with united Mexico.
